Female pilots were rare in the 1930s, particularly in Hitler's Germany, where women were strongly urged to stay at home and tend to their families. Yet, from humble beginnings, Hanna Reitsch, Whirly Girl #1 became the Fuhrer's top test pilot, flew an early helicopter in front of crowds of people, and was eventually awarded the prestigious Iron Cross. Ann Shaw Carter, Whirly Girl #2 was the first woman in the United States licensed to fly a helicopter. She flew sightseeing flights around New York City and became the world's first female commercial helicopter pilot. Commander Joellen Drag Oslund, Whirly Girl #179, became the first female naval helicopter pilot in April 1974. Two months later, Sally Murphy, Whirly Girl #181, was the first woman to qualify as an aviator in the Army. Nancy Sherlock, Whirly Girl #621, was assigned to the NASA Johnson Space Center as a flight simulation engineer on the Shuttle Training Aircraft. In 1991 she became the first Whirly Girl astronaut. Learn more about the amazing women who shaped the history of rotary-wing aviation and find out what square dancing and helicopters have in common.
